

Ourse No.5

Sweating up a sloping hill watching my footing and gasping for air knee high grass and leaning pines up came a clearing somehow bare I checked around to read the signs claw-marked trees and scat covered ground not a whisper, not a sound but overwhelming stench abound I called out, turned, and walked back down